EXPLANATIONS OF THE CHART.

All, with some rare exceptions, who attempt to obtain a clear and correct knowledge of history, meet with one insurmountable obstruction. Although they may, by considerable labor, be able to remember a few abstract dates, yet, the vast and mighty range of history they cannot arrange or comprehend. It was to make this an easy task, as well as for a map of reference, that this chart was constructed. It represents the stream of time flowing seven inches every century: the different colored streams flowing parallel represent different cotemporary nations. When a nation begins, the stream begins; when one nation conquers another, the stream sweeps around, blots it out, and moves on wider than before. The events are written down in the stream just where they took place; those more prominent in larger type, those less prominent in smaller type. The dates in the border, at the top of each division, represent the time before and after the Christian era. The small dates before each event, are taken together with those at the top between that event and the Christian era: for example, "700" at the top, and "76" before the event reads 776, B. C., Epoch of the Olympiads: 753 Rome founded: 476 A. D., fall of the Western Empire: 1453 Constantinople, the capital of the Eastern Empire, falls, &c.

DIVISIONS OF HISTORY.

The chart is naturally arranged in divisions of 500 years each. These divisions are separated by some prominent character or event. Beginning 2000 B. C. Abraham; 1500 Moses; 1000 Solomon; near 500 Daniel and the beginning of the Roman Republic; A. D. Christ; A. D. 500 Fall of the Western Empire and beginning of Middle Ages; 1000 Central period of the Middle Ages; 1500 Reformation.

For the sake of convenience in reference, the history of the ancient and some of the modern nations is divided into periods each period distinguished by a name indicative of its character. This name written in italics is placed near the beginning of the period; for example, see the history of Greece, 1st period, Fabulous, 2d Heroic, 3d Revolutionary, &c.

DEFINITIONS OF SIGNS USED ON THE CHART.

	Battle.
	Sea fight.
Ph.	Philosopher.
Po.	Poet.
hist.	Historian.
math.	Mathematician.
ast.	Astronomer.
Or.	Orator.
div.	Divine.
J.	Judge.
W.	War with.
k.	King.
d.	Died.
a.	Aged.

Proper names, with no mark affixed to them, are names of sovereigns.

Small figures, enclosed in parenthesis thus, (65000,) represent the census. In the history of Rome, the census included only Roman citizens.

Small figures directly under the dates in the border, represent the year of the world; for example, see on the chart under A. D.: "4000;" that is 4000 A. M.

METHOD

---

1. Let the class read over the names that occur in Ancient History, several times, in the presence of the teacher, pronouncing them correctly, according to the punctuation.

These names are arranged alphabetically, beginning on page 96.*

2. Let the teacher explain the Chart to the class, in such a manner as to make every pupil perfectly acquainted with its use. This may be done in few words. (See explanations of the Chart.)

3. Let the teacher intelligibly demonstrate to the pupils the manner in which the Chart assists the memory, by bringing to its aid the associating principle of the mind. It should also be distinctly understood, by way of illustration, that the pupil should endeavor, not so much to remember dates and events arbitrarily, as to remember the relative position and connexion of the figures, names and narrations on the Chart, and in this way to enable himself to bring up the Chart before his "mind's eye,"

* Let not the young pupil be discouraged by so formidable an array of hard names and difficult questions. He will find, that a youth of twelve years of age, with ordinary intellect, by one or two hours' study a day, will, in three or four months, be able to answer correctly the twenty-three hundred questions here asked, and to give a brief account of at least one thousand of the persons mentioned on the chart,—that is, to tell the station which each one of them occupied, and the general condition of the world at the time in which each one of them lived. This is more than can be learned in as many years by any other course of historical study.

and see the events of History in all their bearings, just as in the study of Geography, he remembers the boundaries and other incidents pertaining to different countries, as laid down on the maps.

4. It would be well thoroughly to review, at every fifth or sixth lesson, the ground previously gone over on the Chart, and, as far as possible, to accompany a preparation for the review, with reading historical works on the period under examination.

5. As soon as the class can readily answer the QUESTIONS, let them give the history of each country, in order, from the deluge to the present day. To do this well, it will require several recitations. By following these directions, as well as others which will suggest themselves to the intelligent teacher and the attentive pupil, the student of History, when he takes up any period in its annals, or hears its facts or its characters referred to, will feel himself at home,—will enter immediately into the spirit of the age,—will see the bearing and appreciate the force of every remark, and, in a word, will become a correct universal historian.

If the student should think it best to pursue the study of history still further in school, it may be taken up either in ethonographical, or in chronological order; that is, either by separate nations, or cotemporaneously,—and books of history may be read, and facts mentioned on the Chart, enlarged upon. The recitations should then be conducted without questions, and the students be required to give short lectures upon History; each, in succession, taking up the story where the last left off, and, in a short time, whole classes will be able to speak upon the subject of History with an accuracy and a facility astonishing to those who are not acquainted with the manner in which the knowledge has been acquired. Able and experienced teachers, as well as pupils, have testified, that by pursuing the foregoing method, more History can be learned in one month, than in one year by any other course without the aid of the Chart.

QUESTIONS

ON

THE CHART.

First or Antediluvian Division;

Extends from 4000 B. C. to 2348 B. C., or from the Creation to the Deluge.

The only authentic history we have of times anterior to the deluge is found in the sacred writings. (See the first six chapters of Genesis.) As during this period of 1656 years we have no mention of different nations, and but very little history, it is thought best to give it but a slight representation on the chart.
